RIDER HAS HORSE

SHOT UNDER HIM

Clyde Wiley, one of the principal witnesses in the Parus murder trial, just finished in the district court, had a thrilling experience on the range last fall, says the Elko Free Press. He was riding after horses and was on his way home. As his horse was slowly picking its way down the mountain side, a shot rang out above him and his horse crashed to the ground with a bullet through its head. Almost immediately following the first shot came another, and a high powered bullet zipped by close to his head. He needed no further warning, but immediately sought cover behind the body of his dead mount, and lay there until darkness enabled him to creep safely away.

He says that he has no idea who was shooting at him, but believes that some friends of a man who had recently been arrested for horse stealing at Silver City, Idaho, might have been giving him a warning. The man was never brought to trial for the reason that he escaped and was never recaptured.

Hawaiian Music to Be Feature of Chautauqua Program

The Chautauqua is bringing many great attractions here during its week of big daily programs, but probably none will be received with such great enthusiasm as the one to be given by the Royal Hawaiian Quintet. This company has been one of the favorite stringed quintets of the Hawaiian Islands for many years and is said to be the most musically accurate in their reproduction of Hawaiian music. They will appear in full concert in songs, ukelele and guitar playing the closing day of Chautauqua.

The meat packing plants in Canada employ over 1900 women in various capacities.

Portuguese officers and soldiers in France during the war have to the number of about 700 married French girls.

Large numbers of women in France are being trained by occupations formerly followed by men. Two centers for training them as machine designers have been established—one at Paris and the other at Lyons—and already many of them have developed into expert toolmakers.

ARMY LIFE NOT FOR ATHLETES

(By Associated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, June 3.—Athletes are an aid to soldiering, but soldiering is detrimental to the athlete, seems to be a new adage which has come into being with the return of American soldier-athletes from abroad. Both trainers and the returning soldier athletes have voiced this sentiment on many occasions during the last few months.

In explaining the injury that soldiering does to the star athlete, Coach Frank Foster of the Olympic club has this to say:

"Constant drilling on hard ground is sure to have a disastrous effect on the star track athlete. The man, even though excited from the long, hard hikes, are bound to have their muscles tied up. It slows up a printer."

Foster goes on to say that soldiering improves and strengthens the walking muscles, but stiffens and slows up the "running muscles" which the sprinter must have in order to attain the fractional parts of seconds required in winning cinder path contests.

That these conditions not only affect the sprinter is evidenced by the statement made recently by Earl Craddock, the champion wrestler, who was a sergeant in the American expeditionary forces, and who recently returned to this country. Craddock said he was overweight and slow and unless he found he could regain his oldtime form, would retire from the mat.

Those who have seen William Johnston, former national singles tennis champion, on the courts recently say that he will have to do much work before he regains the form which made him famous on the courts. Johnston served as an ensign during the war, and had little or no opportunity to get any practice on the courts. He is anxious to compete in some of the eastern championships this summer, including the national championships at Forest Hills, Long Island, next August. He recently has been practicing on the courts at Del Monte and, while showing well under the circumstances, was adjudged far below the standard he showed when he captured the title.

Johnston has determined to give himself a thorough tryout and will continue his practice until he is satisfied either that he can or cannot do himself justice in tournament play.

One form of sport that escapes the detrimental influence of soldiering is polo. Many returned polo players have again taken up the game and the consensus of opinion appears to be that they have not lost any of their ability.

Whether or not football players will be affected remains to be seen and the question should be answered

TOO EARLY FOR COLLEGE LIFE

(By Associated Press)

SEATTLE, Wash., June 2.—Alaska is not to have a territorial college and school of mines for two years, at least, although a college building has been erected at Fairbanks, and needs only instructors, pupils and equipment to make it an institution of higher learning.

According to word brought here from the north, Alaska apparently has dropped, for the time, its plans to establish a territorial institution along lines of colleges of the outside states. During the closing hours of the recent session of the Alaska legislature, opponents of the college blocked a measure intended to appropriate $20,000 to equip the college and pay instructors.

Alaskans opposing the college claim that nearly all Alaska young men and women who want to go to college desire to enter institutions in the states. It was claimed that probably only the graduates of the Fairbanks high school—of which there were seven this year—would attend the Alaska college.

"A college in Alaska cannot give its pupils all the advantages they can get in the states," E. J. White, the speaker of the lower house of the Alaska legislature said here recently in explaining the failure of the appropriation to pass. Mr. White favored the college program after it was once started.

"Knowledge that cannot be found in books goes with a college education and it is this knowledge that we cannot get in Alaska," Mr. White continued. "When high school students in Alaska think of going to college they also think of seeing a bit of the outside world at the same time and living in big cities and being where there is more activity than in the north."

Two years ago the legislature, sitting at Juneau appropriated money to build the college building. The federal government promised to appropriate money for the college to keep if the territory would put up the building, pay for equipment and provide teachers.

In the fall. As far as football coaches and players are concerned they practically are agreed that it will not make the slightest difference other than perhaps to offer a set of candidates for the team who have been toughened and made more rugged by their experience in the army and navy.

Those who, like Coach Foster, believe that soldiering has a tendency to stiffen and slow up the athlete will watch with much interest for the times and distances recorded in the great allied field and track meet which soon is to be held in Europe. Many of the best athletes of the United States are entered in the various events.
